In times of stress and strain some of the deeper forces that dwell in human life come to the surface.

What is sometimes called the Great Puritan Revolution in England was a part of the long process of our modern world trying to free itself from the frustrating entanglements with the past.

Out of that struggle in England came the Puritan Migration to New England. Out of it also emerged the Puritan Revolution in England, with its great military leader Oliver Cromwell, the revolutionary dictator of the Commonwealth. Also were emerged George Fox, the founder of the Quakers, Friends.

Fox was arrested, in fact he had spent several years of his life in prison fighting against the Government. wrote a letter to Cromwell. Cromwell sent for him, and they had a long talk together.

Come again to my house, for if thou and I were but an hour a day together, we should be nearer one to the other, I wish no more all to thee than to my own soul.

Anglo-Saxon beginning of conquest of Britain and the struggle still persists in the efforts of Ireland this day and the Irish Republic.

Now these characteristics of us humans come to the surface in times of storm and stress such as we are now living through. If you are at all like me, you can feel them register in your own emotional life. They crop up in all phases of life, - political, industrial and in the relations of Churches.

Anit-Semitism- race conflicts ,
To come through this present crisis without destroying what we have gained, we have to learn to recognize these forces, their deep roots in history, the survival values and the dangers involved.

The passage which I read from the Sermon on the mount, and the farewell sentence of O.C. to George Fox mean the same thing.

A candid interchange of thoughts.
The understanding of the real spirit, of the other.

40--

In the social Economy under which we live, we recognize and ought to cherish the separation of the Church and the State. There are some essential overlaps. We who are interested in the religious aspects of life, live in a social order which protects religious minorities, and does not bow down to majorities.

If we could stand on a high mountain and survey the past, we discover many streams of influence focusing on us.

Off Lae, New Guinea, last September, U.S. invading forces ran into heavy fire, pressed on. Near the beach, the helmsman of LST 473 spotted a torpedo coming head on. Before he could make a move, a bomb struck the pilothouse and blasted him out of action.

Up from the wreckage rose Seaman Johnnie Hutchins, mortally wounded and failing fast. He grasped the helm and turned the ship clear of the torpedo. Then he died with his hands clutched tight around the wheel.

This week, to 21-year-old Johnnie David Hutchins, son of a Texas share-cropper, went a posthumous award—the Congressional Medal of Honor.

Handsome Johnnie's death had brought new life to his home. In Lissie, Texas, his brother and five sisters were finally living in a home of their own, bought with Johnnie's death benefits. His parents were readying for a trip to Washington, at Government expense, to accept Johnnie's medal from the President.

Synthetic Quinine Evolved

Cambridge Scientists Perfect

The manufacture of synthetic quinine, a process which has baffled the world's scientists for more than 100 years, has been perfected after 14 months' research in Cambridge by two 26-year-old chemists, one of them a Quincy boy, the youngest student ever to receive a Ph.D. from Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The discovery will be of tremendous value to the war effort, since quinine is the only known substance which offers full protection against malaria, scourge of military operations in the Tropics. Previously the world's supply of quinine had come almost entirely from the Dutch East Indies, now in Japanese hands.

The synthetic quinine, described as a precise duplicate of the natural substance and undistinguishable from it, was manufactured by Dr. William von Eggers Doering, a graduate of Harvard University with the class of 1938, and Dr. Robert Burns Woodward of Quincy, who graduated from M. I. T. in 1937 at the age of 20.

The quinine project was sponsored by the Polaroid Corporation of Cambridge, and was announced

War's Great Achievement

The two young scientists, using common chemicals in a straightforward and systematic process which yields uniform results, succeeded after 14 months of research in arranging carbon, hydrogen, nitrogen and oxygen atoms in the same order in which they are found in natural quinine.

High among the military as well as the scientific achievements of this war, the discovery robs the Dutch East Indies of much of their political importance as the source of natural quinine.

in an article to appear in the May "Journal of the American Chemical Society."

According to Edwin H. Land, president and director of research for the corporation, the manufacturing process for the new product "will be licensed under consultation with the government."

Japanese occupation of these islands is now greatly reduced in practical importance, while post-war world planning is deprived of one of its major headaches—the world's dependence of the Dutch "cartel" which has controlled the manufacture and sale of quinine.

In addition to the actual process of manufacture for quinine, the research created a new substance of possible medical value, akin to quinine but foreign to nature, thus giving rise to the possibility of a number of quinine-like medical substances which can be synthesized.

The discovery marks the end of a long and hitherto unsuccessful attempt to manufacture quinine without using the bark of the cinchona tree. After the discovery of America, cinchona bark was used in infusions to combat malaria. Pure quinine was isolated from the bark in 1920.

Pasteur's Quinotoxine

In 1853 Louis Pasteur developed a substance called quinotoxine, and in 1908 two German scientists developed the chemical structure of pure quinine, and 10 years later succession as to Allied war aims, Mr. Churchill announced that: "Preliminary exchanges of opinion on postwar questions are constantly taking place between various members of the 34 United Nations."

He added that he could offer hope that "any agreed statement will be made in the near future."

Put into even more blunt language than that which the Prime Minister cared to employ, this means that discussions of such vital problems as the future international organization, the treatment accorded Germany, and basic European territorial changes, are still being carried on in desultory fashion by the governments of the Soviet Union, Great Britain and the United States, and that no agreement in principle has yet been reached.

It also means that so far none of the other 31 members of the United Nations have been permitted any real opportunity to take part in such discussions.

Too frequently the ideas about religion and life are based on the notion that religion is some kind of special thing that we may have or not.

Outcome.

"On February 17. 1900 Rome witnessed a concourse of men such as the great city on the Tiber, accustomed as it has been to imposing spectacles throughout its history, has rarely ever seen. But this time the crowd had not gathered to greet a triumphant Caesar at the head of his victorious legions, nor yet to gaze at the visage of God on earth in the pomp of clerical retinue.

These men had come from the ends of the earth to do honor to a poor wandering knight of the spirit, who after eight years' imprisonment in a dungeon, suffered death at the stake--had come, that is, to unveil a monument in memory of Giordano Bruno on the very spot where, three hundred years before, a tumultuous and checkered human life ended on a pile of fagots.

Why did the nineteenth century, just before closing its doors, think it must pay precisely this man a homage so pure and so enthusiastic? There have been deeper and clearer thinkers, rounder and riper characters, than the martyr philosopher whose form was tossed up and down by the waves of the great popular movement of the sixteenth century. To be sure it was a right brave word which he, the judged, flung in the face of his judges:

"You pronounce their judgement with greater fear than I receive it, perhaps."

Thus believing spirit is most powerful to-day. to put it in other words, Religion, in its true sense was never any stronger or more creative.

See Eliot : " I remark first that the instinct of worship is a universal instinct of the race, an instinct which civilization refines and exhorts, but has no tendency to extinguish. The religious sentiment has always been, and still is, the strongest power in the world, making war and peace, resisting evil, establish-

From Age to Age.

Moments that are symbols of and embodiments of days to come.

When the news of the Fall of Paris, or the liberation of Paris was being announced, I was reading the passage in the Yankee from Olympus describing the circumstances under which young Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote Old Ironsides.
