

The Compelling Power of The Christian life

It seems to be a sort of popular superstition that the living of such a life or way be called a Christ-like life, relegates one to a world of uninteresting things - that all the fun of life all its romance, its compelling values, its absorbing fascinations are to be found in what commonly spoken of as the worldly life, or the life of pleasure, - that the life of the sinner, so called is the life of fun, and joy, = But on the other hand

The life of the religious person is one devoid of romance, of compelling values. - it is negotiated.

There are certain valid grounds for this popular delusion. - but delusion it is.

The reasons why this popular superstition exists are not far to seek. There is also a popular superstition that religion is a sort of mechanical contrivance by which we may escape the consequences of our delicious sins, and continue to enjoy thoughtless eternity a sort of ~~other~~ celestial pleasure

Life, = This popular conception of religion is the result of false teaching in the churches,

Religion is the search for the abiding, - with which values of life, the quest for its greatest opportunities. →

I have referred to the religious life in terms of the Christ-like life.

What is it?

Meaning = of Christ the Word.

Why was Jesus so-called? ?

What was his life.

What is it in terms of some of its striking illustrations

In affairs = Mr. H. Baldwin.

Science. =

Letters.

Stoicism.

Religion. =

Use common place illustrations.

Notes.

The Compelling Power of the Christ-like Life.

According to John, Jesus said of his mission that he came that people might have life, and life was abundant. Over against this declaration, there appears the popular superstition that anyone who proposes to lead a Christ-like life, is taking upon himself the obligation to empty his life of all that is interesting, and joyful. In other words there is a popular superstition to the effect that after all, the real pleasure, the real romance, the real fun of life is not to be found in living what may be called a Christ-like life, but rather is to be found in living what is commonly called the life of pleasure. To illustrate, according to this popular superstition, the really happy, enjoyable life is to be found in following the desires and passions of life, so called. - To go on a good time, is to cast aside all restraints and conventions, and to follow the life of worldly pleasure. - To be lost in the mazes of the underworld, - In short the life of lust, and sensation is the life where the greatest pleasure, the greatest satisfactions, the greatest joy is to be found. To that kind of a life we would all give ourselves were it not for the fact that we have been told by the Church that while such a life may be pleasing to us, yet in the sight of God such a life is a life of sin, not ple to god, and that god will punish us if we follow that kind of a life.

Therefore, continues this popular superstition, in order to escape the displeasure of God, we become christians, - deprive ourselves of all the pleasures that we really to enjoy because we fear some kind of punishment from God. and hope that some how God will reward us for living a sad, gloomy, empty life here, by giving us a life

The Compelling Power of a Christ-like Life.

As we sit here this morning there is travelling across the Atlantic a ship-load of human deviants from all grades of American Society, who have been gathered from the mudswamp of Paris, and other European cities, there such women, some from homes of culture and refinement, - educated and well served for. Some reckless travellers; others perhaps simply the victims of misfortune. What is their story. Drawn to Europe by either the glamour of the war, or the call of service of one kind or another, they have been travelling the broad and gaudy highway of a life of unbridled pleasure seeking, - The result is irremediable. Helpless, friendless, characterless, - reduced at to the last extremity, living amid the ruins of human kind, - they have been befriended by societies organized to take care of them. Their passage across is paid, their food is provided; and arrangements of been made with friendly societies had to care for them after they have landed in New York.

You find can see the <sup>news of the</sup> same sort of people in almost every newspaper that you read. Here and there amid the daily news of the life, there leaps to the front some ~~big~~ tragic story of a disillusioned life. But the smallest fraction of all ever gets into the daily news.

We find them, young and old, in all the walks of life, in churches and out.

Who are they? What are they?

They are those people who for one reason or another take it for granted that a life of self indulgence, of selfish seeking after

The Compelling Power of the Christ-Like Life.

Out of the extra-ordinary developments of the 19th century, which has been called the lofty and rebellious century, there are slowly emerging two great basic faiths.

The Confessing Power of the Christ-Litology,

Sinner, saint, and hypocrite, are three words which are commonly used. In the rough we may describe a sinner as one whose main interests are concerned with what he can get out of life. If the sinner happens to be of meek ferocity.